Many stories have been told on the plains as illustrating the verdancy and Eastern innocence of "pilgrims" and "tenderfeett." One of the best which we recall is related in regard to the manner in which one of the old plains ranchmen up near the South pass got a new wagon. He had an old one, which was practically worthless, and he had made many efforts to trade it off to passing trains and travelers, but without success. He was getting considerably discouraged, when a lone "pilgrim" appeared at the ranch and camped for the night. The "pilgrim" was very green, and, as he was bound over the mountains, had many questions to ask about the mountain pass, how wide it was, and whether wagons experienced much difficulty in getting through. He had a braud new wagon, which struck the ranchman's eye, and he determined to play a bold ganne to get it. The next morning the "pilgrim" saw the ranchman very carfully measuring his wagon, and very naturally his curiosity was excited, and his inquiries were answered by the solemn assurance from the ranchman that the wagon was just two inches too wide to get through the pass. The pilgrim was down. He promptly proposed a trade, the solemn assurance from the ranchman, which he measured and found to be two inches narrower than his own. He promptly proposed a trade, the ranchman demured. His wagon, was old, to be sure, but then it was narrow enough to go through the pass in case he should ever want to visit Salt Lake valley. The more he objected the more importunate the "pilgrim" became, and proketting a good round sum to boot. The "pfigrim" went on his way rejoicing at his good fortune in getting a wagon which would go through the pass in case he should ever want to visit Salt Lake valley. The more he objected the more strikingly reveals the was consummated, the ranchman agenting the new wood, which had been pictured to him, and which he was so willing to believe.

New York Press.

There is no human agency extant which more strikingly reveals the world's progress materially and intellectually than the vast development the world over of the postal system. And the greatest step in advance which was ever made in this medium of communication was the adoption of penny postage in England in 1839. They are just celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of this truly great event, and just honor is being done in his own country to the colobrating the littleth anniversary of sores, tetter, chapped hands, childhand, this truly great event, and just honor corns, and all skin cruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. The most formidable obstacles that after a long struggle Sir Rowland Hill persuaded the British Parliament to declare that thereforth latters bearing a one.

suaded the British Parliament to declare that thenceforth letters bearing a one-penny stamp should run throughout the British Isle from Land's End to John O'Groat's.

Before that postage in Great Britain had cost from eight to forty cents a letter, according to the distance to which it was sent. The proposition to reduce it to a uniform rate of two cents startled the official circles to their center. "The plan must fail!" cried all the barnacles, But the plan was a glorious, an almost immediate success. It was an example, besides, to all the other civilized nations. Gradually every one has taken to trace all the benefits, all the happiness, as well as the conveniences, which cheap postage, the device of Rowland Hill, has conferred upon mankind.

He had an idea, as many another good man has before and since, that it would be nice to have a flock of hens and raise fresh eggs for his own table—possibly turn the venture into a money-making one by the sale of eggs and chickens.
